

Me: Person

Do you believe that when you modify your appearance in some way you become a different person?

Have you ever not recognised yourself in the mirror?

How do you know that the person you see in the mirror is really you?

One day when you wake up your body has changed completely. It has turned into a different body. Would you still be you? Would you feel in the same way?

If everybody else started to think that you are a different person. Would you still be you?

Are we the person we see in the mirror or the person others see when they look at us?

If you were cloned, how would you know who is your real you?

Do you think the child will be the same after the operation?

Imagine that you had two or three brains? Would you be yourself in the three of them or would you be two or three persons?

Would having more than one brain mean an advantage or a disadvantage?

Do you think that having more than one brain would make you more intelligent? What is exactly what makes us more intelligent?

If you could have an extra brain implanted. Whose would you like it to be?

Can you imagine the consequences that this operation will have for the child?

Now that he will have more than one brain, will he still be a unique person, different from the others?
